ORDERS BIG ARMY TO TEXAS BORDER MEXICAN

SLAYER OF MRS. SPOGARD

Mrs. Rose Spogard, aged thirty, faced the jury today when charged with the murder of her husband, Rose Spogard, a tailor, seven years her junior. They had been married only six months. She says he was about to leave her for the second time and this made her frantic. A Frank Williams, counsel for the woman, advised the jury that she was held for the grand jury without bail. She was taken to the police station yesterday and had to be given custody. She will be taken to the Salem jail this afternoon. Early today Mrs. Spogard returned to her room on the first floor of the Hotel Bellevue, No. 17 North street, Lynn, A. A. district. She was out on the street shouting "I've murdered my husband." She ran into the Hotel Port, across the street, with hair disheveled and her eyes wild with excitement. Paul Carlson, the proprietor, followed her to the Bellevue and there found Spogard's body. This he telephoned for the police. As Mrs. Spogard told her story today, she shook with sobs and begged between to be allowed to go back to the hotel to "take this just once more," she said when after her arrest.

Hold Guggenheim Divorce from Mrs. Wahl Is Valid

CHICAGO, Feb. 24.—Mrs. Grace Brown-Helfert Guggenheim-Wahl today lost her fight to set aside the decree of divorce which separated her from William Guggenheim, youngest of the seven Guggenheim brothers. Judge Oscar Heart today ruled against a decision in which he refused to set aside the decree granted by Judge Edward P. Fane, now Governor of Illinois. The ruling was on a motion to set aside the divorce on the grounds that it was obtained by collusion, neither party being a resident of the state when action was brought.

Snow Tonight and Tomorrow, Predicts the Weather Man

It's going to snow. So says the weather man. He forecasts a snowstorm tonight and tomorrow. The temperature is going to change very little. It will get gradually warmer as the storm approaches. Heavy snowfalls will chill the air. The warm air has raised the thermometer since the milder winds blew, but it can't get much warmer until near midnight when the snow is expected. The weather man predicts no more rain for a few days anyway.

Captain Roston was accompanied by his wife. Among the other passengers were Count de Saint Brie, George M. Canast, Lady Hildred, Captain J. Harker and Samuel Leggett.

DEATH OF WENZ'S MOTHER CANCELS WILL CONTEST

Announcement was made in Judge George's session of the Probate Court today that the contest over the will of Henry Wenz, a wealthy Portland street shoe manufacturer, had been indefinitely postponed. This was due to the fact that the contestant, Mrs. Frances Wenz, mother of Wenz, was dead at her home in Austria.

PROF. JOHNSON FOR PREFERENTIAL BILL

Before the legislative committee on Election Laws today Professor Lewis J. Johnson of Cambridge appeared in favor of the "Preferential" bill, providing for the preferential ballot. The bill this year is sent to perfect the working of the direct election system, he said. Professor Johnson said it was a measure which would break the election of a majority candidate and not allow the election of a minority candidate because of any split in the opposition.

WOULD LIFT SCHOOLS OUT OF POLITICS

Several hundred school teachers attended the hearing before the legislative committee on Education today, in behalf of a measure petitioned for by Ernest H. McEneaney, president of the Massachusetts Teachers' Federation, to provide that school teachers shall have political rights during their school year. Mr. McEneaney said that the object of the bill is to take school teachers out of politics.

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK

M A & M was tickled to death last night because we found out that Pa had never won a dollar trip with a real regular performer. Pa had told us so many times that he was a wonderful singer in his younger days that we almost believed him for sure. Ma told him that she hoped it was true, because she said that she would be willing to bet that he was a real regular performer.

At that, too, Ma went too wide. She told us a lot of things we Pa was telling about getting a hundred pound sack on a five cent bet that she had her doubts.

You see, Bobbie, Ma said to me, it is the time that is surprising people about a lot of things that has caught it. It came back from the grave, a fact that it is only a small part of a hundred. The old Pa cannot say that it was a million times of a rainbow trout. Its poor voice, long passed into oblivion, could have been a hundred, but it was only a hundred of a hundred. It was only a hundred of a hundred.

Well, last night a friend of Pa's came to the house. He told us that he had seen Pa in the city. He said that he had seen Pa in the city. He said that he had seen Pa in the city. He said that he had seen Pa in the city.

I know, Mitter Johnson, said Ma, in my own days I used to live at Harbortown. You want my reason to the little Mitter Johnson that he is in the city. He said that he had seen Pa in the city. He said that he had seen Pa in the city. He said that he had seen Pa in the city.

Daysey Mayme and Her Folks

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE

"Of course, there will be the little god of love to guide her and be her companion, but she cannot quite decide whether he would look best at the prow of a canoe or snuggled up between herself and the One Man in the depths of a summery hammock. But she knows that she wants neither the man nor the little fat god to companion her when the Summer lets her sport in the ocean."

T'S shivery and cold, and furs are nice when you venture forth, and it is wonderful to sit at home and read the future in the depths of the wood. The little god of love is in the open fireplace—and that is where you'll find My Lady these Winter-very days.

Her dreams are not of the Winter-very days—she's had those; and while she enjoyed to the full the clank of her skates on the ice that is as smooth as the depths of your mirror-look—and the rush of the skis as she whirled along faster than the wind on an ice-boat—she does not dream of these, for the best dreams are only of the things you have not had and never may have. She dreams the hours away thinking of her wonderful Summer to come.

Of course, there will be the little god of love to guide her and be her companion, but she cannot quite figure out in her mind whether he would look best at the prow of a canoe, that slipped noiselessly through the water around green banks, or snuggled up between herself and the One Man in the depths of a summery hammock. She can't quite decide on which would appeal to her, but she finds it almost better than the reality—'cause she can dream of both at one and the same time.

Even My Lady knows that she cannot have more than one reality in her at one time, and that's why she loves her day dreams.

And then she dreams of taking the breakers as they come in and uttering gracefully through the water. She doesn't want the little fat god of love with her then—'cause he never would look good in a bathing suit—and she doesn't want the One Man or any other man near, because at times they are all so busy—and My Lady is a swimmer who can do more tricks in the water than were ever invented at the "old swimming hole."

So My Lady dreams of the Summer to come and her joys, 'cause Easter is only a minute away—and Summer will be here in two minutes, or at most—three, as she reckons time.

Hunting a Husband

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

Beatrice's radiant evening at the Dance has an unhappy end when Blanchard Tells Her Maynard is Divorced.

SERIAL, round during the remainder of the evening of the dance, Beatrice looked at her friend of her radiant evening.

"I declare, Beatrice," she insisted, "you mustn't tell anything to more than eighteen years old. Whatever has happened to make you look so ravishing?"

Beatrice looked affectionately at the radiant blonde, and kept her own counsel. Her secret was too new for her to be willing to share it even with her friend just now. In her heart, she was exulting.

"All my worries are things of the past," she told herself. "I need not turn sick any more now I remember the hours of expense and the responsibilities that I have washed down for so long. When I am married to Paul, my life will be care-free and happy. I am glad that it has turned out so well."

If she doubted for a moment her love for the man to whom she had promised herself, she would have danced with no other woman present had not Beatrice insisted that, for the sake of appearances, he must do so. She had agreed to do so with a soft, wistful smile that she had never seen before.

The Last Waltz. There could be no doubt as to the sincerity of Paul Maynard's confidence. He would have danced with no other woman present had not Beatrice insisted that, for the sake of appearances, he must do so. She had agreed to do so with a soft, wistful smile that she had never seen before.

At length the gay evening which had extended well on toward morning drew to a close. Beatrice danced the last waltz with Maynard, and then, pressing his hand with a light, nervous, perhaps, but the pride of possession, told him she would give up to be home in a minute, and hurried away upstairs to get her wraps.

Household Hints

Fruit tarts have a more delicate taste when the fruit is made in the oven, even though a small one be made in the top of the crust. This is no doubt due to the heat coming from the oven, and the steam coming from the fruit. To make this, the fruit should be in the top of the crust. The steam will then be able to escape, and the fruit will not be soggy. Or, instead, the steam will be able to escape, and the fruit will not be soggy.

A conditioner is best cooked by being laid in a piece of muslin before putting in the pan. This keeps it whole and white.

One Dose Makes Indigestion Go. Heartburn, Gas, Dyspepsia and All Stomach Disturbances Ended with "Pape's Diapiesin."

You don't want a slow remedy when your stomach is bad—or an unfavorable one. Pape's Diapiesin is the only remedy that is so valuable: you mustn't forget it!

Pape's Diapiesin is noted for its speed in giving relief; its harmless action; its certain and infallible results in regulating sick, weak, constipated, or indigestible stomachs; its effectiveness in relieving dyspepsia, gas, and all other stomach troubles; and its safety in every case.

Now is the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots. The woman with tender skin, a clear complexion, and a healthy stomach are likely to cover her face with ugly freckles. No matter how much she uses the sun and wind, she has a strong tendency to make her freckles.

Fortunately for her peace of mind, the recent discovery of a new prescription, utilizing the most powerful strength, makes it possible for even those most susceptible to freckles to keep their skin clear and white. No matter how stubborn a case of freckles you have, a double strength ointment should remove them. Noble Twins—Mighty Atoms—

Some Boy Playing in the City Gutter or the Field May Teach These "Mighty Atoms" Many Things

"The above snapshot is the first taken of the twin infants of Lord and Lady Howard de Walden. Each morning when the weather is fine these precious morsels of humanity take the air in Hyde Park. They will be among the richest children in the world, for Lord Howard de Walden has an immense rent roll."

What the ordinary American thinks when he sees two women carrying "The Mighty Atom" twins is that Lord Howard de Walden, with his "immense rent roll" might well afford to buy two baby carriages and let the hired women push baby carriages, instead of carrying the twins in their arms.

It would be better for the women, and better for the twins. There are other thoughts more interesting, and more important to human beings in this picture.

Behold these two "mighty atoms," wrapped up in silk, lace and flannel, each with a woman to carry him, each to be included, as the society paper says, "among the richest children in the world," each to derive a tremendous income from land—that is to say, from the work of farmers, struggling to make a small living from the soil.

The most interesting thought in connection with these "mighty atom" twins is this:

Where, in England, or out of England, is now the REAL "mighty atom," playing in the gutter of the city street, or running in the fields around some farmhouse, who will decide just exactly WHAT and how much these Lord Howard de Walden twins shall have, and do, and enjoy fifty years from now?

Lord Howard de Walden prances through life never doubting that his twins will live, prosper, and enjoy, as he has done, inheriting the "great rent roll," and be among the world's richest.

But there may be somewhere in England, or on the Continent, possibly here in this country, a child of the same age, NOT dressed in silk or lace, not blessed with an individual nurse, perhaps rolling on the floor while his mother does the washing, perhaps sitting blinking in the sun outside of some little farmhouse—and perhaps that atom of humanity, not mighty at present, will settle many things for these "mighty atoms" the Howard de Walden twins.

There was such an atom in England, in the days when Charles the First was the great "Mighty Atom" of all England. He thought that he OWNED ENGLAND, or the nurse that carried him thought so. And those that described him, and the great artists that painted him, presented him as one that should rule and enjoy and be always, while he lived, among the powerful of the world.

But while the mighty atom Charles the First was growing up in his royal chattering, there was another atom, somewhat mighty, named Oliver Cromwell, the son of a small brewer, living his early plain and simple life in the country.

And when the atom Cromwell grew up, things happened to the atom Charles the First much more rapidly and painfully than he, his nurses, his relations, or the artist that painted him could ever have imagined. Laws were changed.

Let us wish all possible good fortune and happiness—as far as they desire it, and as far as social justice requires it—for these two little twins parading up and down in Hyde Park in the arms of their nurses.

But let us hope that there is somewhere in England, or out of England, somewhere in the country or the city, an infant who will help to change conditions, an infant who will help to give part of the land of England to the people of England, or at least to put sufficient taxes upon the land that these twins are to inherit.

At present the Englishman who is born poor works and struggles to wring a few shillings from the land, and he sends those shillings to Lord Howard de Walden—and the latter pays no tax practically on that land to help either his nation or his workers.

Peaceful be your sleep at present, noble twin sons of the Noble Lord Howard. May circumstances hereafter put you to work, AND MAKE YOU HAPPIER, AS WELL AS MORE USEFUL.

Capital Punishment Is a Gross Violation of the Great Creative Plan

Solitary Confinement and Other Forms of Man-Invented Tortures Are Monstrous—Laws Permitting Their Enforcement Have No Right to Exist and Must Eventually Become Obsolete.

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Copyright, 1913, by the Star Company.
PUNISHMENT is a word which must eventually become obsolete. It has no right to exist.

There is no such thing as punishment in the great Creative Plan. There is simply Law, and there is Cause and the Effect of a Cause. The law of life is inevitable suffering from broken law. The door of a cruel, selfish, evil deed is always shut out from the enjoyment of real happiness, he is shut in the dungeon of his own mind. And eventually his art becomes a bonanza and brings evil upon him.

The idea of capital punishment, or solitary confinement for life, is man-made and monstrous. The idea of torture, or chaining in dungeons, belongs to the dark ages.

Gradually the word is coming into a realization that breakers of law and doers of evil deeds are failures, needing treatment. Sin and crime are the result of unbalanced minds and wrong development of brain cells.

Some day the great dream of Dr. Elmer Gates will come true, and there will be extensive scientific institutions throughout the land, with great and good men to take charge of them and to train and guide the sinistral souls, who will be sent to these educational resorts instead of to the death chamber or the life imprisonment cell. And by every possible scientific method of brain building (a science that in its infancy) the humors will be absorbed, and the moral, useful, constructive qualities of the brain will be developed.

And punishment will consist simply in patient, systematic education. Not the education of our present day colleges, but the education which comes from right thinking, right use of every brain cell.

Women are supposed to be cooperative in the idea of punishment, but observation does not prove this to be absolutely realistic. The women who believe they are capable of loving in the fullest sense of that word are many; the women who really know that it is to love are few.

Neglected wives who talk to their friends and neighbors about the coldness, indifference and unkindness of their husbands and who seek for sympathy have never crossed the borderland of love. The woman capable of gossiping with any one on such a subject is at the same time incapable of inspiring a lasting passion in the heart of any man.

Something lacking in her nature brought the result she bemoans so loudly.

A loving woman might in a moment of wild anger, caused by well-founded jealousy, say or do violent things; but a loving woman could never deliberately plan a revenge upon the man she loved. It would be impossible for her heart to hold such designs. Therefore, the woman who asks this question has never known a profound and ennobling passion—one worthy of the name of great love.

"How can a woman punish a husband who repays loyalty, devotion and affection with neglect and faithlessness?"

The sooner human beings and nations modify their ideas of punishment and increase their methods of prevention of wrong doing the better for the world.

The human being who violates a principle must find his own punishment sooner or later if left to work out his destiny. Of course, the dangerous criminal must be restricted; but the people who have been wronged, and who cry for vengeance and ask for advice in conducting suitable punishments for the offender, are making more serious trouble for themselves, unconsciously than any which another has brought upon them.

It is a painful thing to be wronged and abused by one we love. It is a more terrible thing to wish harm or suffering to any one. To be sorry for the wrongdoer and to help him to change his course, that is the only attitude to take toward one who has wronged us.

The moment we begin to plan a revenge we begin to degenerate. We harm ourselves and commit moral suicide. Just as sure as the sunset brings darkness, so surely the husband who wrongs and neglects a good wife will meet with his punishment. He will suffer, and the longer the punishment is delayed the more bitter it will be. To save him from his own misdeeds should be a good woman's aim—not to punish him for his neglect of herself.

It is much preferable to be the wronged one than the wrongdoer. The worst thing that can happen to a husband is to lose the love and respect of a good wife. This alone will prove a task to his soul as time goes on.

But the wife who wants to plan a revenge is not a good wife, for all revenge belongs to the evil side of things.

Be worthy of love and respect and loyalty in mind and deed; be worthy of the man who does not realize your worth, but do not debase yourself from your heights of nobility to plot revenge. If you cannot live in this atmosphere, and you are all that a wife and mother should be, the laws of society are formed to protect you and your children.

Your fate is sad—but do not make it sadder.

HOWEVER skilled and strong art thou, my foe, However fierce is thy relentless hate,

Thy firm thy hand and strong thy aim and straight Thy poisoned arrow leaves the banded bow To pierce the target of my heart,

Oh! know I am the master yet of my own fate, Thou canst not rob me of my heart, Thou canst not rob me of my soul, Though fortune, fame and friends, Yes, love, should go, Not to the dust shall my true self be hurled.

Nor shall I need thy worst assaults dismayed; When all things in the balance are well, I shall be glad to die.

There is but one great danger in this, Thou canst not force my heart to wish thee ill— That is the only evil that can kill.

Social Unrest—Due to Disappointment Experienced by Immigrants
Who Were Oppressed
in Their Own Country

Written for the Boston American by

DR. C. H. PARKHURST

CONSIDERABLE of the social unrest to which, for lack of a better name, we have given the name "Socialism," is due to the disappointment experienced by a large class of our recent immigrant population who have suffered under the oppressive conditions existing in their own country and who immigrated to America expecting not only to better themselves by this means, but to attain quite easily and promptly to a state of comfort and comparative luxury. We are bound to sympathize with them in view of the mistaken anticipations in which they indulged when leaving home. At the same time they are hardly justified in blaming us for their disappointment, and still less are they justified in trying to overturn our institutions in order to make good the misunderstanding of their own by which their disappointment was occasioned.

Under ordinary circumstances it is not to be expected of a stranger entering a house that is not of his own building, that he will proceed to reconstruct it and remodel it because finding it modeled and furnished in a style that is not according to his own liking. We are not objecting to their coming, and if they are intelligent, well-behaved and abedded, we are glad to have them come, for there is yet room for them, but we have a right to expect that they will take things as they find them and that they will try to reconcile themselves to our ideas and methods, instead of insisting upon our reconciling ourselves to theirs.

Socialism the Result of Conditions Stimulated
by Exhortation

If they will candidly consider the matter a moment, they certainly will assent to it that this way of stating the case is reasonable. Nor shall we criticize them for their misunderstanding of the situation, nor for the passionate and even turbulent way in which they go about trying to upset and reconstruct the institutions which on their arrival they found existing. They brought with them the passions that had been developed in them at home by the conditions under which they had lived, and which had been further stimulated by the inflammatory exhortations of such men as Marx, Kropotkin, etc.

The pupil becomes like his teacher, and the ground yields according to the seed that was sown in it. All of this we ought as good Christians to remember and to deal with our immigrant friends with all generous consideration; at the same time we are not Socialists, and we are not going to reshape American institutions in a way to accommodate imported ideas. Socialists living over here may as well adjust themselves to the fact, and the more quietly they do it, the better and the pleasanter it will be for all concerned.

CAPTAIN SCOTT

By WILLIAM F. KIRK

THE world was waiting to welcome him Back from the seas

Regions dreary and dead and dim. As brave as Jason, who knew no peace Until he had found the Golden Fleece, He fought his way with his hero heart, With never a guide and never a cheer, Till he felt exhausted across the goal.

Thus did the Captain find the Pole.

The Captain is gone and the Pole is part of the world. Where the hero found it, While the Captain has for the soul of it. After a planet has

Majority of Socialists Are Immigrants Without a Bank Account

That is a crude way of stating the case, and very few would be willing to accept it as fairly representative, but it is at any rate a rough way of putting into words the conflicting impulses that lie at the heart of very near the heart of this whole Socialist business.

You have a dollar and I have nothing. Now let us pool our issues and divide up. You know we are brothers, and it will be a rough way of putting into words the conflicting impulses that lie at the heart of very near the heart of this whole Socialist business.

The larger part of those to whom the Socialist heresy appeals are null hands and null workers, for those are the employments to which the majority of the class of immigrants, just mentioned, devote themselves; that is to say, people without a bank account, and whom a policy of confiscation would not affect impoverishment, but only lucratively.

The largest single element of our American population is the farmers, who can be trusted not only to show no sympathy with Socialism, but to be its stout opponents; for although they are laborers, they are capitalists; they work with their hands, but they have substantial assets in the shape of real estate, enough to understand what the Socialist platform means when it proposes "the collective ownership of land whenever practicable."

Conditions Make Useless
Socialistic Attempts to
"Nationalize"

The census of 1910 shows that more than half of our population are farmers, and more than half of our territory is farm land. It also shows that the capital value of such farm land was a little over four billion dollars, a gain of twenty billion in the previous ten years, with an average value of sixty-five hundred dollars per farm. Now, it is that property that our recent arrivals from Central and Southeastern Europe would like to "nationalize"—which is political economy for "raid." Against infringement of that kind it is no use for the disciples of Marx, Lassalle and Bakunin to butt their heads, not in this country. Modification of our national policy is well enough for them and for any one else to try, but not for any disturbance of the foundations and structural lines of that policy. By striving for so much, they excite the resentment of the whole solid body of our American citizenship and lose the chance of winning anything.
